Minnesota Vote Helped Him Decide to Run, Ike Says

MINNEAPOLIS (AP) — President Eisenhower arrived at the Minneapolis-St. Paul airport for a 10-minute visit today and told well-wishers it was the heavy Minnesota primary vote in vote in 1952 that helped him decide to run for the presidency.

"I felt that the people of Minnesota had a great part in deciding for me that I should let aside the military career in which I so long lived and offer myself for the presidency for the presidency in 1952," Eisenhower said.

The whole vote was more effective than anything else, "more effective than the arguments of officials and politicians," the President said. He talk was told apolitical.

Minnesota Republican leaders who were among the crowd, estimated by secret service men at about 1,000, welcomed the President to the state.

Eisenhower spoke from a platform for six minutes, serious and contrite in an interest chil. The President said he was grateful to Minnesota for "your help given to me in the past, your help in campaigns and people who life in public place."

"We're looking forward to hearing who will undertake upon and discuss the programs of the last eight years," Eisenhower said.

"As we look back I would be very much too modest to say that I have not a responsible for those great advances of the last eight years. But I am grateful that they have taken place."

The President mentioned the contrast in telling the airport crowd he hoped to come back to Minnesota "for reason of our choice."

Eisenhower stopped to talk with Harry Bath Blattman, 13, Savage, Minn., on the set in his wheel chair. Harry Bath's dream of meeting the President is present George Gimmel, Minneapolis chairman, and Ed Yost, former senate.

Among GOP state ticket candidates on hand were Jck Quinn, Cardinal hunter; Bob Johnson, Kenneth Joyce, Frank King, and Curt MacGregor.

Rep. Albert Quie of the First District in which Red Wing is located, fine with the President in Red Wing and then boarded the Eisenhower-Humphrey for the bridge dedication ceremony.

Fourth Debate Friday Likely To Be the Last

WASHINGTON (AP) — The fourth television debate between the presidential candidates Friday night probably will be the last of the campaign.

Vice President Richard M. Nixon, the Republican candidate, Sunday turned down a proposal by his opponent, Sen. John F. Kennedy, for a fifth debate, citing "insurmountable difficulties."

Although Kennedy asked Nixon to reconsider, there seemed little chance that the representatives would agree of anything beyond the fourth joint appearance.

Instead, Nixon suggested changing the format of the fourth debate. First, he proposed eliminating it from one hour to two hours and, failing that, he suggested the cards should be opened to questions from the audience. Kennedy's aides rejected the Nixon proposal.

Nixon's position on a fifth debate drew some barbed comments from Kennedy. In Columbus, Ohio, Kennedy said: "I don't understand how anyone can stand up in Washington and say he doesn't can agree to a fifth debate. I can agree to Nixon's proposal for Eisenhower's law, but can't meet his Democratic opponent here in the United States."

Humphrey Asks Investment In U.S. Future

RED WING, Minn. (AP) — Sen. Hubert H. Humphrey today called for renewed confidence in investment in the future of America as Vice President Nixon.

Humphrey, principal speaker at a civic luncheon celebrating opening of the Hiawatha Interstate Bridge, said America has achieved the highest standard of living in the world but "we cannot lean back and say we have done."

Humphrey acclaimed the bridge as more than a symbol of crossing a barrier. "This engineering marvel symbolizes the Great Plains, spanning the Great Plains, makes new bridges around the globe.

In the Debert address at the third area state district, Humphrey also dealt with a domestic subject. He said the time has come for labor and management to cooperate with one another in a common regard for national welfare.

"Our hunger," he added, "can be satisfied only either grass or grain. We must do best to adopting government measures for personal satisfaction of industrial disputes."

In big Red Wing speech, Humphrey made no mention of Khrushchev's attacks against the United States and Ike. Instead the organizers of the Red Wing Citizen Council gave no hint.

But the timing of the President's remarks—less than a week after Khrushchev's diatribe against Ike—lended his speech an air of pointed reply to the Russian leader.

The bridge he dedicated, extended Eisenhower of the late Senator Hiawatha, who, the President said, was member of the first Minnesota Congressional delegation to celebrate the celebration of the Union today. That organization was Woodrow Wilson's dream of a League of Nations Indeed. Eisenhower added, but we must advance through 50 years of trials or carnage before we can achieve the United Nations of our time.

Apparently abruptly discussing the subject of Khrushchev's diatribes, Eisenhower said that "today for the first time we have a United Nations in which a majority of the nations of our time are represented."

Eisenhower said that "the United States has renewed Cuba of the demands for the restoration of her sovereignty.

The State Department also warned Americans to stay out of foreign disputes.

The admonition and warning Sunday were evoked by Cuba's expulsion of Alan Dale Thompson and Richard Otis Fuller, Fuller was sentenced by a military tribunal at taking part in an anti-Castro plot.

Noting that next Monday is United Nations Day, Eisenhower called for continuing in assistance of the United Nations as the best means for resolving differences and for seeking workable compromises.

Dedicates New Hiawatha Bridge

By MARVIN L. ARROWSMITH

RED WING, Minn. (AP — President Eisenhower today for a ceaseless struggle to strengthen and succeed of the United Nations, target of Soviet Premier Khrushchev's bitter attacks.

"We dare not slumber," Eisenhower declared, stating that the United Nations offers the foundation elimination of the causes of war.

The President vigorously championed the internation al organization in a speech prepared for dedication at the Hiawatha Bridge spanning the Mississippi River at the Minnesota-Wisconsin boundary.

Eisenhower, on a cross-country speaking tour five days from Dec. 5, said the Mississippi Valley Sunday night the President said, at the middle of the bridge, which chosen the burden of carrying the Soviet Union, Jan. Communist premier, problem facing their Fed Ver's hate, make new friends around the globe.

Ike Blundered, Kennedy Charges

By EDMOND LEBRETON

MIAMI, Fla. (AP — Sen. John F. Kennedy charged the Eisenhower administration today with blunders which, he said, cost this country its inter-American leadership and opened the way for Communist inroads.

The Democratic presidential candidate asserted this was as he reported an attention day's campaigning in Florida — only 90 miles from Cuba where, he said, "the forces of alien tyranny have found their way into the Western Hemisphere."

He called for a massive diplomatic offensive to rebuild the good neighbor spirit in the Western Hemisphere and to safeguard our security in the Progress — Alliance Para Progreso.

Kennedy sought to tie his Republican opponent, Vice President Richard M. Nixon, directly to what the senator termed the lack of an aggressive imaginative and vigor that cost this country Latin American friends.

When President Eisenhower, Russian's wicked emphasis in the Cuban crisis, Kennedy said, he has not a little state of "Long Ike discovered."

But, Kennedy said, when Nixon went to Latin America, "they threw stones instead of cheers. They shouted 'Down with the United States.'"

Kennedy said Nixon was confronted with a Communist-backed mob program in Cuba five years ago might have avoided the takeover by the Communist-minded Fidel Castro regime.

But, Kennedy went on, "Mr. Nixon blamed. was in Latin America five years ago. He saw no

Special Tax Return for Older Persons

WASHINGTON (AP)—Starting Jan. 1, taxpayers who are 65 or older will have to file a special income tax form in addition to their regular return if they want to claim deductions for medical expenses.

Internal Revenue Service officials said today they are dropping the new form to comply with a law which Congress passed without notice nearly six months ago.

Taxpayers 65 and older have been entitled to special benefits for several years. They can deduct all medical expenses, within certain broad limits, whereas others can deduct only those expenses that exceed 3 per cent of their taxable income.

U.S. Accuses Cuba in Killing Of 2 Americans
